Dahlia Novelties of Real Merit My Specialty

THERE is no plant grown that gives you so great a variety of exquisite colors, varied and artistic formations, and long season of bloom as this—"the flower that came back."

I grow eleven types and 650 varieties, more than 600 of which are listed in this catalogue. This collection is the result of eight years careful selection of prize winners from those listed by the largest growers of America and Europe, as well as a few of my own creation indicated by (Q.).

Awarded Gold Medal for Growing Exhibit, Panama-Pacific International Exposition, San Francisco, 1915.

Special Award Silver Medal for my new varieties, Panama-Pacific International Exposition, San Francisco, 1915.

TERMS CASH

All orders for future shipment require a deposit. My Dahlias are guaranteed true to name.

Customers are recommended to join the California Dahlia Growers Association, yearly dues $2.00; in return you will receive the Association's Bulletins, containing history, culture of the Dahlia, and other information of interest to the members.

Full particulars will be gladly supplied by the secretary, C. S. QUICK, 1508 Le Roy Ave., Berkeley, Cal.

DAHLIA CULTURE

If the following directions are observed, I do not hesitate to say that everyone should have satisfactory results. The Dahlia deserves a place in every garden. With the new varieties added each season and the extraordinary array of colors which they possess, the time must come when every lover of flowers will always have a few, if not large tracts, of these beautiful Summer and Fall flowers, which grow with proper care in any climate.

BUYING TUBERS

Buying the tubers is a very important part in the results that are anticipated; when planting time comes, the first thought should be where to purchase, and I may say that I can meet the demand of the most critical. My collection is now one of the finest in America. The varieties are strictly up to date and the quality of my stock is not surpassed in this country or abroad, as I select from the different growers' collections only their finest ones, from which, at the end of the season, are discarded those not proving up to the high standard I endeavor to maintain. Many find it a great advantage to buy at the Dahlia Gardens at blooming time.

SIZE OF TUBERS

This does not in any way designate the size or quality of the flower. Medium and small-sized tubers produce the finest flowers and the best and most effective plants. The only requisite of a Dahlia Tuber, whether large or small, is to be sure that it will produce one or two eyes (more than two eyes or sprouts are a detriment to the plant) and with proper cultivation success is generally assured. Many exhibitors prefer plants, as they produce the finest blossoms. This was my experience at the Panama-Pacific International Exposition Horticultural Gardens, 1915, where my growing exhibit, grown from Dahlia plants, was awarded a Gold Medal.

It is the universal practice of European growers to use plants. I find them very satisfactory, and it was plants that I used at the Panama-Pacific International Exposition last year, setting 260 of them on July 14. By September 5 two were in bloom and others followed rapidly and continued to bloom for the following three and one-half months. Of course the plants had consistent care, cultivation and water twice a week, but no fertilization whatever though, as the ground had been thoroughly prepared the fall previous. On the 12th of January, 1916, I dug and shipped to Berkeley over one thousand pounds of tubers from the above planting.

SOIL AND FERTILIZERS

Any well-drained soil is suitable for the Dahlia; it should be plowed or spaded in the Fall, then another thorough working over in the Spring, allowing it to mellow before planting is begun. A mulch of several inches of cow or sheep manure should be applied at base of each plant as soon as the first buds appear, which will enable the plant to better perfect its bloom. This should be forked lightly into the soil.

LOCATION

Open sunny spots seem to favor them at all times; care should always be taken to protect them from the wind, as their tops are generally heavy and brittle and have a tendency to snap off if not protected by a windbreak or bamboo stakes to which they should be securely tied. I note that Dahlias are particularly adapted for seashore gardens and not only do well but thrive for the reason of the moist atmosphere.

TIME FOR PLANTING

Dahlia planting varies considerably according to the locality, whether sheltered or open, early or lateness of the season, and the time when the general crop is desired. Dahlias should be planted from 2 feet to 3 feet apart, and covered to 4 inches deep. Never plant tubers on end but lay them flat. Water very lightly until well above the surface, as the tubers decay if too wet. Immediately on receipt of the plants they should be set out and carefully watered, and for the first day or two they should be shaded from the bright sun. Cultivation around them every day gives better results than all the artificial watering. Each plant should have a support, to which the main stem is carefully tied.

For the benefit of those who have never grown Dahlias from plants, I will mention that the production of tubers is not eliminated by this method.

CARE OF PLANTS

Care should be taken at planting time for the prevention of cut worms and snails in destroying the young shoots; I recommend the use of tobacco dust or soot; each is beneficial as a fertilizer. When 8 or 10 inches high is best time to drive stakes, as later you are liable to injure the roots. While plants are about a foot high, an occasional spraying with a solution of "Nikoteen" will kill or keep away the aphid or green fly which so often infest Dahlias. To obtain the largest and most perfect flowers, only the best and largest buds must be allowed to mature, the others taken off, enabling the full strength to develop these into exhibition bloom.

The height of dahlia plants may be governed somewhat by the following method: After the young plant has formed two pairs of leaves, nip out the top. At the base of each leaf will grow strong laterals, which will make a low, stocky bush. This will delay the blossoms about two weeks and more space will be required between plants than if left to grow in the natural way. These laterals should each be supported, as they are easily broken from the base. If your dahlia blossoms come small and imperfect, loosen the soil around the base of the plant and flood the ground well, for nine times out of ten this is what is needed. One quart of liquid manure applied at base of plant each week will help amazingly.

CULTIVATION

This is one of the most important features to secure success. Never allow the soil to crust. Cultivate twice each week if possible, even before plants are above the ground, and follow this rule religiously the entire season; stir deeply until buds appear, then cultivate two or three inches deep so you will not injure the tubers, which form at this time.

WATERING

Irrigation once a week while growing is better than daily sprinkling, as the latter brings the roots to the surface, making a short-lived plant. When blossoms appear give deep irrigation weekly through the manure mulch applied at intervals during the season and forked in.

CUTTING

When the flowers fade snip them off. To make Dahlia blooms last after cutting follow this suggestion: cut flowers late in the evening or early morning, and plunge the freshly cut stems into hot water two inches deep for a few minutes, afterward into deep, cool water, and put them away in a cool cellar for the night. In the morning bring them to the room where they are wanted, and flowers then will easily last for three to four days. The least foliage on the flower stem the better the flower will hold up. Wilted flowers may often be revived by immersing the stems in 2 or 3 inches of hot water.

HARVESTING

After the Dahlia tops die, dig carefully on a clear day and allow the roots to dry with as much soil around them as possible and put in a cellar away from heat and frost. By having the soil around the roots, you protect them from getting broken and keep them from drying out too much. Broken tubers are worthless. Cover with dry earth, coal ashes, sawdust or some material to keep them from drying or frost. They should be examined occasionally to see that they are not decaying or withering and the defective ones taken out.

DIVISION OF DAHLIA TUBERS

This must not be done until Spring or from two to four weeks before planting. Care must be observed in the dissection of these, whereby a small piece of crown or old stalk must be left with each tuber to enable the eyes to sprout, as most of the eyes are on the crown and very rarely on the tubers. If sprouts get too long before planting cut them off near base, new and better ones will come.

CONCLUSION

Everything depends on the existing conditions, so that all you have to do is to study your plants and Nature. Dahlias should not be overfed or pampered any more than a child or any animal. Use judgment and never make the same mistake twice, plant late in the beginning and earlier as you learn how to keep them blooming all through the hot Summer. If you have two or three plantings, you are sure of success with at least one lot and during a favorable season, all of them.
